

Mince

Living in a mans world

In the story "A Rose for Emily" by William Faulkner, Emily lived in the south with her domineering father. Emily's father wouldn't let her date anyone because there was no one who was good enough. After Emily's father died she stayed to herself until she met a man by the name for Homer. Homer didn't want to marry anyone, and Emily ended up killing him. In the story "Trifles" by Susan Glaspell, Minne was a house wife who lived on a farm with her husband Mr. Wright. Mr. Wright was a cold man who didn't let Minnie enjoy what she used to. Minnie had a bird which Mr. wright killed and in turn Minnie killed him. The women in the two stories, Emily and Minnie are a lot alike not just because they killed some one but because of why they did kill them. They killed because of the time they lived in. Emily and Minne both were brought up in the time before women started to become equal. They were pushed to far and this is why they killed men in there lives.

Too detailed for intro

Thesis? History prompt

not her for slaw

— Emily was driven ^{by} but man power. She was not aloud to pick what she wanted for herself. Instead her father dominated her life, and this was accepted because it was the way life was. Emily's father was so controlling that when he died she tried to hide it from the public so she could stay in denial and not have to feel lost without him. After she let people in to take the body away she stayed to her self and didn't leave the house. She had her butler do all the shopping. Her life was frozen because she didn't have a man in her life. I say that, because as soon as she met Homer she started to go out again. As though she needed a man in her life to make her feel like a human being.

could be support

what?

good New FT

The problem with homer was that he was a mans mans and was not willing to get married. Emily wanted to be recognized and wanted her dignity so when Emily knew that Homer was not going to stay with her she decided to kill Homer. She did it in such a way no one would know she killed anyone. She kept homers dead body in her house because why?

SUPPER

Minnie lived when women weren't thought to be worth much. Her husband kept her cooped up in the house most of the time. She no longer did the many things you too when she was younger and single. Before Minnie was married she use to sing, and dress nicely, but that a changed when she met Mr. Wright. Her friend could no longer stand to visit because of how cold the house became. Minnie got a bird which was most like Minnie for the reasons that Minnie loved to sing, she was Sweet, pretty, and timid, just like the bird. So when her husband killed the bird it symbolized the death of Minnie and her love for life. I feel that at that moment Minnie snapped and became enraged, and turned crazed and killed her husband. I state this because she was a nice sweet, and timid lady, if she was sane she would not have killed her husband.

? you ?
do?

guts *

more than 1 ft needed
her

Textual
SUPPER